THE BACKGROUND OF Esterbrook

• Esterbrook Pens are known the world over for their easy, smooth writing qualities. They have earned their fine reputation through their uniformity, their long wear and their resistance to corrosion from the acid used in all writing inks.

In 1858 Richard Esterbrook, the founder of the pen-making industry in America, came to this country with a little band of master workmen to establish the tiny shop that was the start of the great plant that bears his name. Up to that time all the steel pens used in the western world were imported from England. No one in America had been able to make them.

Not only did Richard Esterbrook establish himself as the leader of the pen-making trade, but the leader in pen-quality as well. Quality was his thought. He would not accept anything but the best in material—or workmanship. He knew that there was but one way to build a permanent business. And he left this quality of intent as a legacy of integrity.

This legacy has been zealously guarded and maintained by his successors until the business has grown to be international in scope and Esterbrook Pens are recognized in all countries of the world as the standard line of pens for all purposes. There is a style exactly suited for each and every style of writing.

The making of every Esterbrook Pen requires several weeks, and fourteen or more operations. The process is one of exacting care. Each pen must be exactly like every other one of its kind. The points must be exactly alike. There must be no difference in the thickness of the metal, nor in its flexibility.

The selection of the steel used in making Esterbrook Pens is made with the greatest care and every bit of this metal is tested with patience and exacting scientific caution. It is the best steel the market affords. It is as fine as that used in watch springs.

New methods and modern machinery have constantly been added, as the mechanical arts have advanced, to maintain and raise the standards of excellence set by the founder. Precision measurements and scientific control of all operations have gradually made Esterbrook Pens the recognized standard everywhere.

The Esterbrook factories in Camden, New Jersey, are the largest and most modern pen factories in America, as well as the oldest. More pens are produced in them than in all the other pen factories in America combined.

There cannot be the slightest difference in the writing qualities of Esterbrook Pens bearing the same symbol number. To make sure that all of this tremendous output is perfect, each pen is examined individually before being boxed and shipped to the four corners of the world. The name Esterbrook stamped on a pen means quality through and through, and complete pen satisfaction for the most particular writer.

Esterbrook Steel Pens received the one and only Grand Prize ever given in America for pens. This prize was awarded at the International Exposition in St. Louis by a committee composed of representative American stationers. The highest honors were also awarded at London, Buffalo, Chicago, Philadelphia, Charleston and other expositions. This is a gratifying tribute to the excellence of these renowned pens.

STANDARD COMMERCIAL STYLES

• Infinite care is used in the making of Esterbrook Pens. Steel from purest ore, refined and tempered under keenest scrutiny. Measurements precise to one ten-thousandth of an inch. Heat treatments regulated to a degree. Finally, minute examination of each individual pen.

That is why Esterbrook Pens are better—wear longer—write smoother. They represent the combined skill of master workmen constantly striving to produce better and better pens. Today, the world looks to Esterbrook for authoritative pen design and construction.

ONLY ESTERBROOK PENS ARE ESTERIZED—Made by the Esterbrook Pen Co., using a secret process which retards the corrosive action of blue-black and other inks one-half. Since corrosion is the major destructive agent of all carbon steel pens, these pens will give TWICE THE SERVICE of any other pen under the same conditions.

ESTERCROME STYLES

Stainless - Corrosion-Proof

• Recent scientific developments of alloy steels have proven the merits of Chromium. Its use has made possible corrosion-proof, stainless, and wear-resisting materials and a surface of lasting beauty. With these obvious advantages, Chromium alloys are replacing less efficient materials.

Recognizing its value, Esterbrook has developed a Chromium alloy especially adapted to the manufacture of pen points. The result is the Estercrome line of pens shown here. To the usual high quality of Esterbrook has been added a durability and long life which this new material now makes possible.

DRAWLET PENS

for Lettering and Drawing

• Drawlet Pens offer to the student or the professional artist a tool for rapid and sure pen and ink strokes. Lettering with Drawlet Pens is extremely simple. It is just a matter of combining a few simple strokes to make the different letters and borders.

The accurately machined and turned points give a uniform sharp line when the penholder is held in the natural, easy position for writing.

Nineteen different points, each with its reservoir, each making its ink stroke smoothly, with clean, sharp edges, and doing it again and again without variation in width and without blotting. Can be used successfully with show-card colors.

THE ADJUSTABLE RESERVOIR (An Exclusive Drawlet Feature)—There is no cleaning or adjusting problem with the Drawlet Pen. This reservoir can be cleaned and adjusted repeatedly and returned to its original position without breaking. No other pen has this reservoir—no other pen delivers the same stroke precision.
